In reply to your suggestion the other day of aid to Cushman in connection with civil liberties, I scribbled a note on your memorandum which was not very satisfactory. The trouble was that I didn't know anything about Cushman, and I wanted to be reassured that he wasn't a wild man.

I have just had a chance to look him up, and obviously he is one of the best people in the field and ranks at Cornell in the intellectual tradition of Carl Becker. I don't think we could do any better than to make a grant to him for this purpose, and I hope you will push it.
